

Terry Kirby-Chimwaza is a project director for student support service grants at SUNY Erie Community College with 15 years of experience working with programs that support the academic, personal, and vocational needs of at-risk students. Originally from Syracuse, Terry relocated to the WNY area to attend Buffalo State University and went on to receive a BA in Communications and MS in Higher Education Administration. Once considered an at-risk student herself, as neither of her parents attended college, Terry is inspired daily by the courage, tenacity, and resilience displayed by the students she serves and has made it her mission to ensure that they have the resources needed to be successful. In her free time, Terry enjoys spending time with family, exploring hiking trails at the various NYS parks with her husband, and binge-watching TV shows.
